Theatrical Pink Teas. By Alice Rohe.

'It's a great idea to collect a crowd about everything pertaining to the stage, and theatrical pink teas give them the opportunities of their lives, "Half of the Harlem matrons will for-get all about the anguish of riding home during rush hours, and even the hustling the dinner into preparation and looking after the children will pass into oblivion if they can get an occasional glimpse of a living lady of the stage."

"I should think it would make them discontented," reflected the Philosopher.

"I guess it does sometimes, but the majority of them are that way, anyhow. Women are by nature actresses, though you might doubt that statement when you see some of them on the stage. Anyway, the artificiality, the unrealness of stage life, the absolute difference from the routine of everyday existence, appeals to them. They don't reason past the footlights into the real lives of actresses, and they think the whole game breathes a rose-tinted atmosphere and dramstic gla-"It's all off with Harlem now since high as the fence

"Well, that's pretty safe," commented the Amateur Philosopher. "What's its flavor?"

"Oh, as to that, its flavor is of Broadway and its name is their theatrical pink tea. It has been inaugurated by a popular woman actress as an after matinee attraction, and you ought to see the women flock up behind the curtain.
